We assessed whether impaired physical health is associated with increased risk of all-cause mortality in a large cohort of patients with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). Prospective study using a baseline survey. A total of 1496 patients (97% male, age 68.3 ± 11.3 years) with clinically stable COPD (41% stage II and III)

who were newly prescribed with a long-acting bronchodilator. Patients were followed until either death or the end of the study (9.7 ± 2.2 years). At baseline, data on self-reported physical health (the Chronic Respiratory Questionnaire) were obtained. Cox regression models were used to determine whether impaired physical health is associated with higher risk of all-cause mortality. A total of 562 patients (37.5%) died during follow-up. Higher prevalence of impaired physical health was associated with increased risk of mortality. Patients who reported impaired physical health were more likely to die at all COPD stages except in stages I and II. When we controlled for important confounders (FEV(1), physical activity, smoking status, severity of COPD, pulmonary function tests, number of exacerbations in the previous 12 months, and body mass index), the association remained significant (hazard ratio: 1.23; 95% confidence interval: 1.04 to 1.45; P = 0.02). Impaired physical health is associated with higher risk of all-cause mortality in patients with COPD.Q: Problem running a Python script to simulate machine learning model I have a small python script below that trains a model and then tries to predict a new data with it. #This is part of a complete code that includes more than 30 scripts import cPickle as pickle import tensorflow as tf import numpy as np from sklearn.model_selection import train_test_split def load_pkl(fname): with open a1d647c40b
