The ability to open and save results in Word. Acessibility The program is very simple to use and has a very simple interface. It doesn't make use of various graphical objects or widgets in order to appear more visually attractive. Nevertheless, it does have some neat features that add a little bit of eye candy to the whole appearance. For example, it allows the use of the Roman Numerals, enabling the display of the results in the Unicode format. It also displays the product in the hexadecimal system in order to show the results in the 16 digits format. Additionally, you can change the appearance of the displayed result. You can use four different modes for displaying results: written in the hexadecimal format, written in the decimal format, floating format (integer numbers are formatted as floating numbers), and the mixed mode (a combination of the three other modes). The program uses an easy-to-understand layout, since it displays the results directly in the box. It is equally easy to read, regardless of the size of the number or the amount of characters. Multi-tasking The program can execute several tasks simultaneously, provided that you launch them using separate windows. Additional Features The program offers the following features: Support for floating numbers. The ability to choose the format of the numbers. Support for the calculation of the product of two or three numbers.

TEMPORARY AIR NAVIGATION COMPANY. Supreme Court of United States. Argued October 19, 1885. Decided March 4, 1886. APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF THE TERRITORY OF UTAH. Mr. N.P. Jewett and Mr. J.H. McCarter for appellant. Mr. J.S. Morehead for appellees. MR. JUSTICE GRAY delivered the opinion of the court. He stated the facts as above, and continued: The appellant is the owner of a steamboat *230 and tugs, employed by it in the transportation of freight and passengers over the waterway from the east to the city of Salt Lake in the Territory of Utah. These boats lie alongside of the docks of that city, and, during the winter season, when the surface of the river is frozen, are unable to navigate to or from the sea. The defendants, in this suit, are the owners and operators of a railroad bridge across the Columbia river, at Wallula, in the Territory of Oregon. That bridge is large enough to admit of the passage of freight and passengers upon it, and was built for that purpose. The navigation of the river is also controlled and regulated by a state commission. It has its limits, and, within those limits, its bed is, by statute, made a public highway. The defendants, as owners of the railroad bridge, exercise control over that part of the navigation. They obtain from the state authorities, in the exercise of that control, all permits and licenses which are necessary, and may exclude vessels from those waters in which the bridge is erected, until the time when the river is open to navigation. By the act of Congress, approved February 25, 1871, "any person or persons, under contract with the United States, may file with the Commissioner of the General Land Office a written protest against the granting of any permit or license under the provisions of this act, and may file with the Secretary of the Treasury a similar protest against the granting of any permit or license to a person to take coal at the Atlantic ports, or of a
