right to seek compensation from the employer, but it gives the employee the right to press for that compensation. The question was whether the employee had the right to accept any compensation offered by the employer rather than press for it. It was held that the employee had that right and that his action was not barred by laches. Since the decision in Morasse, there have been additional cases decided by this court on related questions and the rule is well established that the employer is entitled to know that the employee is going to claim compensation before he is injured and that if he then negligently injures the employee, the employee may be entitled to compensation. We reaffirm that rule, but make a clarification of the right of the employee. To be entitled to compensation the employee must accept compensation after a finding of compensable injury. The right to accept compensation is in accord with the right to pursue the employer, but the acceptance of compensation must be after the compensable injury is found to exist. It is not essential that the acceptance of compensation be by an award, as the employee may by agreement accept compensation before that event. The right to accept compensation, however, is not without limits. The employee may not accept compensation if he knows that the employer will not pay it. His duty to pursue the employer is not satisfied when the employer voluntarily pays compensation and if he later accepts a second payment, the compensation acceptance is not binding on him. He has the right to accept compensation if he is not guilty of fraud or wilful

I have a website in IIS 6 and in the host headers, the names are resolved to the IP address on the hosting service. The website runs fine, but when I try to view it through the domain name I get a 404 error message. I have been to this site and it says the problem is that the website is not listening for requests on the www subdomain. I have double checked my IIS 6, and verified that the site has a binding and an app pool for the www subdomain. The site was working on a different domain name before I started using the hosting service. I have checked the IIS 6 error log and it is not reporting any errors. Any help would be greatly appreciated. UPDATE: I have added the domain name as a alias for the domain name that I registered the website on the hosting service. I also changed the application pool on the hosting service to use the same application pool as my website. I still get the 404 error when the website is not running on the IP address. A: I haven't seen your site (I'll upvote for you and take a look), but I'd check and make sure the DNS is sending the "www" record to the IP address. On Wednesday, FOX News' Greta Van Susteren addressed an audience that included members of the NRA at the National Rifle Association's annual meeting,
