Trace formation in solution-based and gel-based lipidic bilayers: Fluorescence and IR studies on tripeptide Ca-alpha-carbonic anhydrase. We report here on the use of high-resolution attenuated total reflectance Fourier transform infrared spectroscopy, fluorescence spectroscopy, circular dichroism, and differential scanning calorimetry to provide insight into the behavior of the enzyme alpha-carbonic anhydrase in solution and in the gel state. Furthermore, we have studied the behavior of tripeptides covering the binding site of the enzyme in the membranes as well as on the enzyme surface. In the solution state, all peptides have similar spectra indicating a random orientation with an average area per peptide of a few thousand angstroms. Both in solution and in the gel state, the peptides are associated in a very dense ordered state, indicating a high degree of structural order in the membrane plane. This is in agreement with the well-known importance of the acyl chain packing in membrane fluidity. In the case of the tripeptide at the active site, there are variations in the structure between the two states, which are quite large in the case of the gel-state, which is attributed to hydrophobic interactions between the peptide and the membrane. As the membrane becomes more hydrophilic, the tripeptide moves from the membrane-water interface to the hydrocarbon core, a process that leads to a more compact structure. This is a clear demonstration of the importance of the membrane in the enzyme function, although we have not detected any effect of the membrane on the enzyme catalytic activity. Nineteen-year-old Manuel Angel Rodriguez was involved in an argument at a vacant home in San Clemente and began firing at a group of teens. When a 13-year-old boy ducked for cover, he told police he saw Rodriguez fire in the direction of the boy, who was hit in the abdomen. Rodriguez told police the boy did not move away and continued to fire at him, hitting him in the face. The teen died at the hospital. Police said the boy's family has identified him as Manuel Angel Rodriguez. Rodriguez was arrested after investigators traced the revolver's serial number to him and another victim told police she was at the scene during the shooting. Police found the gun was registered to Rodriguez. The San Clemente Police Department did not immediately respond to requests for information on how many shots Rodriguez fired at the time of the shootings. As of Wednesday evening, Rodriguez remained in jail in lieu of $3 million bail. He faces one count of murder and three counts of attempted murder. The third shooting victim died.
