The patches removed are: Me The Patch Registration Cleanup Tool In our recent report that examined the federal research dollars distributed by the National Science Foundation to colleges and universities, we found that a disproportionate number of those dollars went to male-dominated research areas, particularly male-dominated STEM fields. We, along with many other researchers, have raised concerns about this disparity, questioning the nature of the funding that goes to these fields and how it affects the work of women in STEM fields. Now, the federal government has taken the first steps to look into the matter. According to the U.S. Office of Management and Budget, the president's proposed fiscal 2019 budget includes an Office of the Assistant Secretary of Budget at the U.S. Department of Education. The office will be responsible for assessing "the availability, distribution, and use of federal research and educational resources and the impact on women and underrepresented minorities." "We will be looking at what specific research and education policies support the goals of the president's 2017 executive order 'Promoting Excellence and Innovation in Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics,'" said Tammy McCann, a spokesperson for the Office of Management and Budget. The organization that has already taken action is the U.S. National Science Foundation. In June, the National Science Foundation established a committee on the Incorrect patch registration due to incorrect registration of an MSI patch or a patch file may cause incorrect registry entry to be created during installation. For example, in a scenario where the product has been patched with the latest patch for a specific issue (patch number 1), but the patch file (patch file version 1) has not been registered and the patch has been installed on the target computer, the correct registry entry may not be created for this patch, which results in incorrect patch registration. Resolution: Run the Patch Registration Cleanup Tool to scan your computer for any patch files that have been unregistered. Remove the patch file from the list of registry keys that are registered and corrected and re-install the patch file from the correct patch file, and then remove the patch file from the list of registry keys that are registered and corrected.
