About the author: See also the author biography and personal notes at the end of this article. I was born in the small village of Sesimbra, in the North of Portugal. It's a typical village, almost without tourism and without an airport, located about 3 kilometers away from the ocean and the most famous city in the Algarve, Faro. From the moment of its discovery, in the year 1900, Faro was a key point in the ship's route. It was also a stopping point for foreign ships and it had a very important trade at that time. I have a relative on my father's side that was born here, and in this place I was born as well. I had a classmate in nursery school that later became my wife. I was a primary school student in Faro, during the years of 1975 - 1980. After school I started to work
