INTERVIEW: Triple H on his WrestleMania wish list 7 Apr 2015 Andy Dangerfield Triple H hasn't stopped talking about the proposed WrestleMania match he wants to see - no, he's still not done with it. The WWE World Heavyweight Champion addressed a number of issues in an extended interview with ESPN's Fantasy Football show Monday Night Football, however, not one of them was talking about his WrestleMania desire to face the Rock. With a win over Brock Lesnar at WWE No Way Out this past Sunday, he had his biggest victory since WWE No Mercy in 2010, and now, he's got all the motivation he needs. "I got motivation to get out there and bust my ass and I got motivation to get out there and destroy Brock Lesnar," he said. "This is the time to do it." For those who have been wondering, as well as everyone else, the in-ring matchup that Triple H has been talking about is Brock Lesnar vs. The Rock. When asked if that was still the match he wanted to see at WrestleMania, he answered emphatically, "Oh yeah." "We'll do it at WrestleMania," he said. Triple H has also appeared on MNF on several occasions in the past, but it's always been in a hyped up role. He appeared for various segments, including the ones where he led the cheering section and did his interview with Bob Costas. But Sunday it was different. For the first time, he was interviewed by NFL analyst Jon Gruden. The segment was basically a Q&A with three different questions, yet it was both lively and fun to watch. "Every year, everything is feeling like it is an amazing year. I've been putting my best foot forward, been working my ass off for the last eight, nine months and I'm still one of the top guys in the world," Triple H said. "It's great to be here and have a tremendous time. That's what I enjoy doing and it's important for me to show that face to this industry, show the world the real me." The interview with Gruden, like the rest of it, ended on a positive note.

Treatment of rhinopharyngo-oesophageal reflux disease with standardized Chinese medicine. Mesalazine and hydroxyzine hydrochloride are used extensively in the treatment of functional dyspepsia. However, it is not known whether they have any anti-reflux effects. This study was undertaken to evaluate the anti-reflux effects and side effects of treatment with a standardized Chinese medicine (chloropyrocatechol, with and without mesalazine). Seventy-two patients with rhinopharyngo-oesophageal reflux disease (RPE) were randomly divided into four groups: (a) control (n = 18), (b) treatment with mesalazine at a daily dose of 3.6 gm (n = 19), (c) treatment with mesalazine plus 2.4 gm of chloropyrocatechol (n = 20), and (d) treatment with mesalazine plus 2.4 gm of chloropyrocatechol plus 4 gm of hydroxyzine hydrochloride (n = 21). The subjects were all treated for 1 month. The main outcome measure was the severity of RPE symptoms, in terms of the Rhinotillexitory Fluctuation Test (RFT) and the Gastrointestinal Symptom Rating Scale (GSRS), and the effect of treatment on the symptoms of RPE was evaluated after therapy. The scores on the RFT, GSRS and a self-rating scale for the psychological factors of anxiety and depression showed a significant reduction in all the patients. The effects of treatment with the standardized Chinese medicine, as well as the effect of combined treatment with mesalazine and chloropyrocatechol, were better than that with mesalazine alone. There was no significant difference between the two groups treated with chloropyrocatechol alone, or with chloropyrocatechol plus mesalazine. The standardized Chinese medicine not only relieved RPE symptoms, but also had a good effect on the psychological factors associated with RPE.
