Eyelet Automation is designed as a simple to use tool for help you preparing images for printing. The program automatically identifies the corner (or corners) on the image and then it creates a set of circle grommets (or eyelets) with a predefined diameter (or height) and exact position (or angle), precisely where you choose to insert them into the image. After that you may set the number of eyelets to be created in all the corners, and apply the measurements to each one of the dots. Additionally, the program allows you to choose a default location for the eyelets (or grommets), as well as the number of dots per side. You may define the distance between the marks in each side, as well as the dot diameter and its distance from the edge. The script creates the circles in all the four corners. By default, all the images in the source folder have the same format. You may apply the settings to a single image or enable the batch processing. In the latter case, the software can open each image from the source folder one by one and apply the settings.
