“While a more authentic simulation on this level requires high-quality 3D assets, we wanted to make as big a leap as possible in gameplay in the best FIFA we have ever released,” said Karl-Johan Folin, Executive Producer at EA SPORTS™ FIFA Development. “With the HyperMotion Technology, the ability to re-create a complete football match with all the authentic-feeling game elements is achievable with the data we have collected from real-life players. It also allows us to allow and create completely new game modes and gameplay features.” The most obvious game mode that will make use of the information gathered using the players’ movements will be a mode called “All-New Player Ratings,” which gives players a basic rating based on how they played during a match. Players will have an overall rating, as well as a rating for their position-specific game elements. Examples of these are Touch, Strength, Stamina, Power and Headers. Other new modes and features, such as 2-on-2 All-Stars and a number of new game features, including the First Touch Control system will also use the data collected from the players to improve the game. The game also features three new attributes that are added to players. These include Skill, Shot Power and Accuracy. Skill represents the player’s ability to make decisions and execute their moves with any of the game’s game features. Shot Power reflects the strength of the shot at any point during the match. Finally, Accuracy will represent how reliable the player is at judging where to shoot. This will include how good the player is at scoring headers and being in the right position to receive passes. Watch a trailer for the mode below. Get a closer look at FIFA 22’s technology-powered features with EA SPORTS FIFA 22 Demo Video Watch full-length gameplay of the All-New Player Ratings mode. • Watch on-screen displays of the player ratings for a full-intensity football match. • See each position’s rating of its game-specific attributes, Touch, Strength, Stamina, Power and Headers. • Highlight a player and you will see which attributes he or she excelled in based on his or her position.
