The motion capture data generated from this match is then used as a foundation for the new FIFA Intelligence system in FIFA 22. High-intensity gameplay is simulated by AI improvements and contextual intelligence, and is underpinned by all-new FIFA-specific physics and real-time player behavior. FIFA Intelligence For the first time, local team behavior and other environmental factors are factored into the simulation when providing gameplay intelligence. Where previous FIFA games focused on individual player performance, FIFA Intelligence is a football-specific AI system, tuned from scratch to deliver intelligent, informed decision-making and goal-scoring when players have possession of the ball, utilising accurate, live and in-game data to create a realistic simulation of real-life football. The introduction of FIFA Intelligence really shows through in the animation and player behaviour, as it has been tuned to ensure that players remain strong-willed and unpredictable, and create a better, more varied, experience for fans and players. Emphasis is placed on a more natural attack and style of play, featuring an increased emphasis on dribbling and player movement, to create a more realistic, more authentic and more satisfying gameplay experience. FIFA 22 introduces a number of new stylistic moves, creating more space and options for attacking players to manoeuvre and exploit, adding more depth and variety to the gameplay. Offensive attacking passes are more complex than in previous FIFA games, with an increased emphasis on short and long passing to create more opportunities in tight spaces. Off-the-ball movements are more realistic and meaningful, and tackles and interceptions are re-tuned to ensure that they remain fast and unpredictable. Re-Tuned Movement Sliding tackles and blocks are harder to perform and harder to block, making them more unpredictable. Runs that cross the touchline before a pass has been made are more common, and successful runs are more likely to get a shot away. Re-Tuned Tackles and Interceptions Interceptions now take place on the ground or when running with the ball. Tackles can now be performed as tackles or slides, with the slide option allowing for greater movement and unpredictability. Overall, the balance of techniques has been adjusted to maintain the unpredictability and pace of the game, while maintaining the relative threat of
