For years, the world has been waiting for Hollywood to get its head out of the proverbial sand and admit what we have known all along. The American romantic comedy, the backbone of the film industry, has been left in the rearview mirror. The 1980s had a great group of romantic comedies, led by their megastar, John Hughes. All the ingredients are there: a lead character who is a little (or a lot) neurotic, an unlikable character who makes his or her way to the end of the film, and quirky situations that parallel everyday life. Think about it. You have a doctor who is dating the assistant to a famous surgeon, a husband and wife trying to make up their marriage, a bank executive attempting to rescue her shoplifter boyfriend, a couple of kids trying to figure out their differences, a couple who is trying to have children, etc. Yet, even though there is somewhat of a formula, no two of these movies are exactly alike. That is the key. The formulaic approach to what is essentially a classic genre has been a lost art for decades. Good films such as Sorority Babes in the Slimeball Bowl-O-Rama and Dumb & Dumber didn't get in the way of what made great films great: the characters and the story. One of the biggest culprits of the latest trend in movie making is Kevin James, most notably on television with his short-lived NBC series Kevin Can Wait. Since his best-known movie, no doubt, is 1988's Bad News Bears, which had a cult following when it came out, it is easy to believe that he knows how to write a funny script. That is, after all, what made Goodfellas so great. James' next move was to take the formula of his cult favorite and try to recreate it in the feature-length realm. Paramount Pictures e79caf774b
