That means better player AI, improved ball control, more realistic player movements and even more realistic animations such as that of players fouling opponents as they go down and the ball hits the turf. The AI is not flawless, however, as FIFA always seems to have a tendency to overload players and for them to make uncharacteristic errors. It's a shame since FIFA likes to boast about its AI. Where FIFA ULCS is about 'just you and the ball' with up to 22 players controlling it all at once, FIFA focuses more on the player and the pass the ball with only one player on the ball at a time. Match Day and Match Settings

The main screen features the traditional button interface – score, pass, shots, etc., plus player and coach information and game menus. To access the game play screen, you click on “FIFA Mode” and you’ll be taken to a screen with five tabs and a button to play a full 90-minute match against a computer opponent. To select the team, click on the “Men’s Clubs” tab. The “Men’s Teams” tab offers you the choice of 16 different men’s clubs to play as – so you can recreate the clubs of your childhood or of your favorite players from the past. The match settings includes some options I wish EA Sports would include. First, there are a few stadiums available. That’s fine, but I’d like to see the goalies come from a different team so there’s a true variety of goalies available to choose from. FIFA has always had some really awful goalies that can't actually cover, kick or stop a ball. It's the worst cliché in football, but that's reality. The new "tactical view" is what allows us to watch the game like we used to in the old days when you had to manually switch to match view every 10 minutes. In match view, I can switch between the five match tabs - including a detailed view of the pitch, player stats, etc. After the initial setup of playing versus a computer opponent, you're then put into the stadium where you'll be playing. As mentioned earlier, there are only 5 stadiums, but they're well done - and some you'd be glad to see on your own couch. In
