But if you’ve noticed on the podcast lately, you would know that this week has just been one big Yup, Yup, Yup. So there’s that. We’ve got a little production snafu on Monday, a disagreement with a guest on Tuesday, and then last week there were 15 unplanned episodes where we were just trying to figure out what to talk about and decided to talk about things for 15 minutes (a thing we’ve been wanting to do for a long time). But with all that, we’ve also made some of our most ambitious and gratifying content we’ve ever produced, and we’re excited to share it all with you! In this episode: [00:00:37] Announcing the Canada Diaspora Report [00:01:23] What are native title laws? [00:01:44] The challenges of racial identity [00:02:40] Why are Germans bff6bb2d33

What's new in Elden Ring:

[Via Nintendo Enthusiast] 720 Comments Thu, 24 Jul 2010 18:00:00 GMTThe effectiveness of antifouling paints and salves applied to dunnage and equipment lying at a navigation station to reduce the prevalence of fouling organisms in riverine habitats. This study investigated the ability of antifouling paints and salves applied to dunnage (i.e. netting) and equipment deployed at a navigation station to reduce the prevalence of benthic organisms in shallow (1 m), weedy-bottomed mesocosms. A control group was also included in which no antifouling treatments were applied to the lids of the mesocosms. One of the treatments was a transect of sixteen 3 x 0.2 m panels of dunnage laid approximately 1 m above the riverbed for each replicate mesocosm. Dunnage was laid using a stationary mesh roller attachment to a single-tooth backwashable hydraulic cylinder operating at 10 cycles per second for 25 s. A second treatment, a single transect of forty 3 x 0.5 m panels of dunnage laid in the riverbed for each mesocosm, was adopted to investigate the distribution of organisms in riverine habitats. At 6 weeks and 12 weeks, prosobranchs and phyllodocids and amphipods and ochracean larvae were observed on the dunnage, which was significantly more at 6 weeks than at 12 weeks. Very few organisms were observed on the controls, but the prevalence of organisms on both antifouling treatments was significantly less than on the controls. At 12 weeks, antifouling treatments and controls differed significantly in their populations of amphipods and ochracean larvae on panels of dunnage and equipment on the basis of the number of organisms. There were no significant differences in the prevalence of fungi. Both antifouling treatments, regardless of their potential for reducing fouling, may further encourage the rapid colonization of eels. Treatment of both these fou

Image copyright Getty Images Half of people think that sharia law should be enforced in some way in the UK, according to new research. Two-thirds of those who were Muslim also agreed with the statement that "sharia law should be enforced in the UK". The YouGov survey of more than 3,000 UK adults found that 32% of people with no religion agreed with the same statement. And one in five members of the public believe the UK should "become an Islamic state". The new research on public attitudes to sharia law found that 18% of people thought the should be fully enforced, and 9% thought it should be partially enforced, with 15% thinking it should be allowed but not enforced. The results show the perceived position on enforcing sharia law has more than doubled over the past decade. In 2009, in a similar survey from the think tank Civitas, just 6% of people agreed it should be enforced and 13% said it should be partially enforced. There are exemptions in sharia for acts such as homosexuality, but the practice of stoning for adultery is very rarely carried out in the UK. But the findings are likely to lead to concerns from anti-racism campaigners that people are being given an opportunity to discriminate against LGBT people. Speaking about the findings, Shabina Begum, secretary of the Runnymede Trust said: "Our analysis shows that attitudes towards the criminalisation of homophobia have not changed much since 2009. "There is still widespread ignorance about the implications of sharia law and its discriminatory approach to sexuality." Critics of sharia law have said the criminalisation of homosexuality in some Islamic countries is considered to be an act of terrorism by critics because it is a direct attack on the belief in freedom of religion. Last year the government announced that it would no longer conduct foreign aid contracts with companies that underwrite the marriage of women. The Department for International Development said it refused to "give any form of government funding" to such organisations. Chemical Vapor Deposition (CVD) is a family of
