What's New in the AutoCAD?

Workflows, such as the New Landscape Drawing (or New Landscape Project) workflow now support collections. Collect many different sets of related drawing, block, print and graphic files into a new folder structure, and easily organize and reuse your new assets. Drafting Tools: Snap is a new dimensioning tool for aligning two objects on a shared axis. Simply select one of the objects, and Snap will use the selected object as a base point. Next, select the second object to align. Snap will now draw a line between the two points. The Edit Distance tool now has an option for different extents, such as window or block. This is useful when you need to specify your viewport or block in an exact location, such as for dimensioning and locating lines. Faster command set export: New AutoCAD commands include an export command to save your current viewport and annotation settings. (This includes customizing the appearance of dimension, annotation, text, and more. See Customize the Command Bar.) You can now also export your drawing page layout, measure tool and snapping settings. The viewport and annotation tools now include previews for your drawings. Previously, if you exported your viewport or annotation settings, the system would attempt to export only one of these, so you may not have seen the new preview until after you had saved your settings. A new crop tool allows you to crop a shape based on a viewport, rectangle, or object selection. The Clone Objects command now clones the geometry of only selected objects, not the entire drawing. You can now customize your line width and color to help you see your lines more easily. Improved New Landscape Drawing (New Landscape Project): Support for a new landscape drawing template that was introduced in AutoCAD 2018. New Landscape projects now include the New Landscape Drawing, New Landscape Block, New Landscape Print, and New Landscape Graphic file. Each folder of files includes a unique color for each object, so you can distinguish the different objects in your drawing. It is now possible to specify the color and object types that you'd like included in your New Landscape Project, which makes it easier to start and track your New Landscape project. All of the files in your New Landscape Project remain in the same folder structure, so it's easy to add
