Following its initial release, AutoCAD 2022 Crack was ported to numerous platforms. In addition to Windows, AutoCAD runs on the Apple Macintosh OS, Linux, and Solaris and Unix-like operating systems. Other supported platforms include: HP-UX, IRIX, RISC OS, OpenVMS, DOS, OS/2, and OS/400. In 2002, the company released AutoCAD LT, which is a non-profit version of AutoCAD for small businesses, schools, and other non-profit organizations. On February 27, 2015, Autodesk announced that it will release AutoCAD versions for the Apple Watch (3D modeling), iWatch, and iPad (2D drafting). History AutoCAD's early origins can be traced back to 1963, when Robert A. Smith, the co-founder of "Unisonics" and later "AutoDesk" (now Autodesk) worked at a small "Sintro" subsidiary of United Airlines. In its early years, Autodesk was involved in developing a range of graphics packages for the Apple II. One of these packages was called "AutoCAD". In 1975, Autodesk was acquired by Aladdin Industries. During this time period, Autodesk was involved in developing a range of computer-aided graphics packages, including the "AutoCAD" family of graphics products. On September 14, 1982, Autodesk was incorporated as Autodesk, Inc. In 1983, Autodesk was awarded the European Small and Medium Enterprise (SME) prize. On December 14, 1983, Autodesk was awarded a US Small Business Administration (SBA) grant to develop a prototype of a commercially available computer-aided design (CAD) product. This prototype product was a personal Computer-Aided Design (PCAD) product, which ran on a computer running DOS. This prototype PCAD product was released in early 1984. On January 23, 1984, Autodesk was awarded a US Small Business Administration (SBA) grant to develop an Apple II version of the PCAD product. This Apple II version of PCAD, released in 1985, was renamed "AutoCAD". In August 1986, Autodesk was awarded a US Small Business Administration (SBA) grant to develop a prototype CAD product based on the hardware platform of the S100, Bethlehem Board of Education to Discuss Budget Issues Bethlehem school board members will hold a public hearing tonight to hear from residents and discuss budget issues. At its meeting Wednesday, the board is expected to approve a $7,664,538 budget that represents a $171,000 deficit from the school district's $8,744,642 budget in 2003-2004. The budget reflects a 10.3 percent decline in enrollment. The board also plans to discuss guidelines for evaluating teachers. In addition to holding public hearings, the board has started hiring consultants for teacher evaluations. The board has hired a consultant to evaluate the process, strategies and goals of teacher evaluations in Pennsylvania. The board hopes to complete the evaluations by the start of the school year in September. School board members approved the guidelines for evaluations during their December meeting. The guidelines do not include teacher evaluations on students' progress toward proficiency. School board members want a broader view of their duties to include evaluating the district's programs and services. "We're looking to look beyond the classroom and look at things like our community service, our arts, our childrens' programs," said board member Chris Martinez. In addition to spending $5,000 on the evaluations, the board has

Speaker Nancy Pelosi (D-CA) is pressuring House Democrats to keep pushing for an impeachment inquiry, but would only approve impeachment if the public supports it. Pelosi told her caucus on Wednesday, "Let's make this about the public. Let's make this about the Constitution. And let's make sure that we understand what is before us, the facts. And what we are doing is giving the American people the facts. They deserve to know the truth." She added, "Let's make this a fact-finding inquiry. And let's do the right thing." (h/t Daily Caller)

President Barack Obama said he still believed that a nuclear deal with Iran could be achieved during a meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu in Washington DC this week. Obama's comments came during a meeting with Netanyahu at the White House on Monday, during which the US president was said to have reaffirmed Washington's commitment to preventing Iran from developing nuclear weapons. "There are still potential paths towards a diplomatic resolution,” Obama said. “And I’m not going to prejudge where we get to if we can get to a comprehensive solution that meets our core security concerns. I still believe that it’s possible to reach a comprehensive agreement with Iran.” However, the president said that he would not rule out the possibility of a military strike on Iran if a deal was not struck in the near future. “I want to do what’s right for our national security and the security of the world,” he said. “But I am also commander-in-chief of a military that has to maintain our capability to meet our national security challenges.” The Israeli leader, meanwhile, reiterated his country’s demand that Tehran abandon its nuclear ambitions. “I
