melanogaster is a widely studied genetic model organism whose powerful genetics and small genome make it an excellent system for genetic and molecular analysis of biological processes. The goal of the proposed work is to continue our efforts to elucidate the mechanism of gene regulation by the homeobox-containing gene engrailed in Drosophila. We have cloned engrailed, elucidated the organization of the engrailed gene and its chromosomal context, and shown that engrailed itself and the proteins it regulates can elicit a powerful segmentation defect when ectopically expressed. We have demonstrated that engrailed mRNA is dynamically regulated in a tissue specific and developmentally regulated manner, and we have isolated three engrailed transcripts whose expression is regulated in a specific time-dependent fashion. Moreover, we have shown that engrailed transcription and splicing are separable events. Finally, we have identified a novel enhancer that directs engrailed expression in the hindgut and we have obtained preliminary evidence that it may be regulated by en. Mutations in the engrailed gene result in homeotic transformations in the insect's body axis in a tissue-specific manner, and based on the observation that the engrailed gene is known to be expressed in the developing nervous system, we predict that engrailed encodes a homeodomain transcription factor. We will
