By Lindsay Peterson, McClatchy Washington Bureau Updated 9:19 pm, Wednesday, May 6, 2014 The White House released a list of press conferences on Wednesday as the administration continues to shift away from immigration reform. Two large-scale media blitzes to talk about federal enforcement of immigration laws and reform of the nation's workplace laws started with separate events this morning in front of the White House. White House press secretary Josh Earnest released a list of press conferences on the economy and other topics on Wednesday. He said that the administration plans to "speak more frequently" on issues related to workplace protections, "and we will do so while also highlighting important enforcement efforts related to immigration." In its list of planned press conferences, the administration did not include one to focus on Obama's plan to lift a ban on Cuba travel for U.S. citizens. That announcement was expected later this year, and the Obama administration will be working to lift the ban as part of a broader diplomatic opening with Havana, which was heralded by Obama when he announced the changes to the Cuban travel policy in December. Many Democratic lawmakers have urged the president to lift the ban. While the White House has not taken a position, several administration officials have said publicly that the president will not lift the ban and that Congress would have to vote on the matter if it tried to do so. At a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing yesterday, Attorney General Eric Holder reaffirmed the administration's position. "The president, I believe, will not — and his policy in this regard has been very clear," Holder told Senator Charles E. Grassley, R-Iowa. The administration has also said the Cuba policy changes will not affect relations with other Latin American countries that are part of the policy. Nonetheless, the travel ban has hurt relations with Cuba, which cut nearly all ties with the United States for nearly 50 years until Obama's historic move toward normalization in December. The two countries restored diplomatic relations earlier this year. The White House would not comment on whether c6a93da74d
